TARREST OF THE

BY MRS. MRILY HUNTINGTON WILLIAM. Heart of firsh ! cost weep to powder, On thy dawy spring-lime gone. On the years of chibihood slipping Through thy fingers, one by one

Is the ruse upon thy bosom. Brooping leaf by leaf away ! And the ido! thou hast guilded, Slowly crumbling back to clay?

Art thou thinking of the meadows.
Where thy feet may trend up more! Art thou shrinking from the shadows And the burning mads before? Were it sweeter to be lying,

In a slumber undefiled, With the mosalight on thy forehead As a little stainless child? Heart of flesh ! thy vanished childhood

Was the bloom upon the vine; life must change to riper glory, Ere the vinlage may be thine. For thy pure and trustful dreaming Thou shalt win a larger bliss, Reading all the future brightness By the shadowy light of this.

Then, when one by one, the blussum From thy life shall full apart. And the heavy feet of trial Tread the red wine from thy heart.

By the kneenness of its anguish, By the greatness of its wors, Learn her high an earnest menhood Lies above thy youth's regense.
